KREOVIX PRESENTS

5-Minute Storytelling Script Builder

A simple framework to write clear, high-retention scripts fast.

THE 5-PART STORY ARC

Hook → Context → Conflict / Twist → Turning Point → Resolution / Lesson

A practical storytelling framework for creators, brands and businesses.

CREATE • TRANSFORM • INNOVATE

So you're stuck getting started...

I'm sure you've had this moment:

You watch people script effortless, super engaging videos... and it feels like some secret talent that only some people can have...

But it isn’t talent.

It’s a simple, learnable structure.

THE 5-PART STORY ARC

1. Hook
2. Context
3. Conflict / Twist
4. Turning Point
5. Resolution / Lesson

By the time you’re through this guide, you’ll know how to turn any idea into a clean, powerful story using a framework that makes scripting feel easy instead of overwhelming.

Let’s get started...

The Story Structure

Here’s the five-part structure at a glance:

THE STORY ARC

1. THE HOOK — the intro

2. THE CONTEXT — the backstory

3. THE CONFLICT / TWIST — the friction

4. THE TURNING POINT — the bridge

5. THE RESOLUTION / LESSON — the payoff

Here’s how it works in action...

Each part has one job. The hook earns attention, context makes the story clear, conflict creates tension, the turning point changes direction, and the resolution delivers the payoff.

1. Hook

Hook should always be less than 5 seconds, or 12 words.

The best hooks are in these 5 categories:

1. SHOCKER

2. WISDOM

3. QUESTION

4. STATEMENT

5. TIME-HOP

Shocker:

“Why the f is it so ____ to do ____?”
“I don't care if I get cancelled for saying this but ____”

Statement:

“The biggest game-changer for ____ is...”
“This is one of my least favourite ____”
“You have a __% chance that ____”

Wisdom:

“Here's what I would do if I ____”
“I did ____ over (number) time, here's what I learned”
“They say you can ____ but what they don't tell you is ____”

1. Hook (continued)

Time-Hop:

“126 days ago, I learned the most important lesson of my life...”
“Three months ago, I had a crazy idea...”
“Ever since I was 17, I ____”

Question:

“Is it possible to ____?”
“What if you could (insert hypothetical into story)?”

OPEN LOOP

Open loop examples:

“All it takes to do ____ is to do one thing”

“I went from X to Y by making just one change”

“There's a secret trick that I use to ____”

2. Context

This is the backstory.

The trick is to give just enough background so the viewer understands what's happening and why it should matter to them.

Keep it simple and visual, this is where the audience starts to connect with your world.

Use the timeline below to visualize how your story structure works in theory.

START ■■■■■■■■ HOOK ■■■■■■■■ CONTEXT ■■■■■■■■ END

The context should bring the story back to here. The hook should feel like an immediate setup to the answer. The answer to the hook is here.

3. Conflict / Twist

Every story needs friction: a challenge, mistake, doubt, or problem that throws things off balance — and ultimately, creates interest.

At this point, we must make the viewer want the payoff even more than before — what obstacle did you come across on the way to achieving what you set out to in the hook?

This section is almost always initiated with the word...

"BUT"

1. Identify the blockage:
State the moment things stop going to plan.
“But then...” “Except...” “There’s where it fell apart...”

2. Tie the conflict directly to the goal set up in the hook.
If the hook is “I wanted to fix X,” the conflict is “Here’s what made that harder than expected.”

3. Relate using emotion:
Internal obstacles are more impactful than external ones.
Fear, hesitation, misjudgement, doubt, lack of clarity.

4. Turning Point

The moment the story shifts towards the solution.

The decision, realisation, or small win that changes the direction of the story.

YOUR JOB HERE:
Show the moment of change that moves you from stuck to progress.

1. Answer the conflict:
Show the exact thing that helped you break through the obstacle.
A new insight, a different approach, a mindset shift, a tool, or a tiny action.

2. Keep it immediate:
This is a single beat, not a montage.
The viewer should be able to point to one moment and say: “That’s where it flipped.”

3. Make sure it is valuable and relatable:
The turning point should feel like something the viewer could try themselves.
“So I switched to...” “I realised...” “I started X instead...”

4. Connect it directly to the payoff:
Whatever happens here should set up the final result logically. If the payoff is the solution, the turning point is the spark that makes it possible.

5. Resolution / Lesson

The resolution is the payoff.

The outcome created because of the turning point. It closes the loop you opened in the hook and proves the story was worth watching.

YOUR JOB HERE:
Show the result clearly, simply, and in a way that reinforces the point of the story.

1. Make it meaningful:
The outcome doesn't have to be huge — it just has to resolve the tension you set up.
A small win is enough as long as it's specific.

2. Tie it back to the viewer's reality:
Show why this outcome matters or what it unlocked.
A clearer workflow, a better way to do something, a simpler routine, a mindset shift.

Mini-ChatGPT Prompt

Once you have a rough script written...

You can plug your script into ChatGPT using this prompt, to refine and fine tune for maximum retention.

KREOVIX STORYTELLING SCRIPT REFINER

Act as a human expert storyteller and social media strategist who creates highly engaging, retentive, and authentic short-form stories for Instagram Reels and TikTok.

I will give you a concept, idea or initial script. Your job is to turn it into a compelling, real-world script that feels like something I'd naturally say on camera.

Your process:
Hook: Give me 3–5 highly original, non-clickbait hook options that feel conversational, scroll-stopping, and not overused.
Story: Structure it around the 5-part story arc, making the flow feel natural and easy to follow.
Script: Write one full draft script in first-person, anecdotal language.
Keep delivery natural and conversational.
Use open loops and a clear cause-and-effect flow (or another retentive structure).
Add an 'invisible' second hook mid-script to re-hook viewers and increase retention.
Prioritize authenticity, short sentences, and pacing that feels like real spoken word.

Exclusions:
Do not use generic 'tips and tricks' hooks.
Do not use fake personal stories, or ChatGPT-esque phrasing.
Do not make it sound scripted or artificial.
Do not make it overly formal or over-polished.

Authenticity Check: Internally vet the script against how high-performing storytelling creators keep their stories engaging and authentic. Ensure it feels deliverable on-camera and a real person.
Refinement: After generating, ask me 3–4 smart, specific questions to refine the script to my style, audience, or visuals.

Always provide in your response:
Multiple hook options
One full script draft
Refinement questions

Here's the idea/script so far:

This is just the foundation.

There’s so much more that goes into followable storytelling:

- powerful hooks that actually land
- retention techniques that keep viewers engaged
- intentional visual planning and shooting
- editing that brings the whole story together
