A HOOK IS A PROMISE — MAKE THE VIDEO KEEP IT.

First, understand what a hook does

A hook is the opening line, visual or moment that gives someone a reason to stop scrolling and pay attention. It sets an expectation for the rest of the video.

IMPORTANT: No hook goes viral every time. Reach depends on the topic, audience fit, delivery, watch experience, timing, distribution and the value of the full video. These are reusable hook frameworks—not guaranteed viral formulas.

A strong hook usually does at least one of these things:

- Makes a specific promise.
- Names a problem the viewer recognises.
- Creates a curiosity gap worth resolving.
- Challenges a familiar belief.
- Signals a story, result or useful lesson.

The simple test

Would the right viewer know this video is for them within the first few seconds? If not, make the opening more specific.

15 hook frameworks | 01–03

1. THE DIRECT PROBLEM

“Struggling to [specific problem]? Start with this.”

When to use it: Use when your audience already knows they have a problem. Name the problem in the language they use.

Example: Personal brand: “Posting consistently but still not getting enquiries? Check this first.”

2. THE SURPRISING TRUTH

“The biggest mistake people make about [topic] is…”

When to use it: Challenge a common assumption, then explain the more useful truth. Make sure the insight is genuinely surprising.

Example: Creator: “The biggest mistake new creators make is thinking better gear fixes boring content.”

3. THE SPECIFIC RESULT

“How I went from [starting point] to [result] by changing one thing.”

When to use it: Use a real, verifiable result and explain the change. Add timeframe or context where it matters.

Example: Creator: “How I made my talking-head videos easier to watch by changing one part of my setup.”

4. THE MISTAKE WARNING

“Stop doing [common action] if you want [desired outcome].”

When to use it: Point out a costly or counterproductive habit. Explain what to do instead; do not exaggerate the harm.

Example: Video editing: “Stop adding transitions to every cut if you want your edits to feel cleaner.”

5. THE OPEN LOOP

“There’s one thing I always check before I [important action]…”

When to use it: Create a clear question in the viewer’s mind, then answer it before the video ends. Never withhold the answer just to pad watch time.

Example: Creator: “There’s one thing I check before every shoot—and it has nothing to do with the camera.”

6. THE UNPOPULAR OPINION

“Unpopular opinion: [belief] is overrated. Here’s why.”

When to use it: Use a defensible point of view. Explain your reasoning respectfully instead of manufacturing controversy.

Example: Personal brand: “Unpopular opinion: posting every day is overrated if your message is unclear.”

7. THE QUICK TRANSFORMATION

“Do this one thing to make your [process/result] better.”

When to use it: Promise one practical improvement that can be demonstrated quickly. Keep the outcome realistic.

Example: Creator: “Do this one framing change to make your phone videos look more intentional.”

8. THE BEGINNER SHORTCUT

“If I were starting [topic] from zero, I’d do these three things.”

When to use it: Use your experience to reduce confusion for beginners. Keep the steps prioritised and actionable.

Example: Personal brand: “If I were building my personal brand from zero, I’d fix these three things first.”

9. THE QUESTION HOOK

“Why do some [people / brands / videos] get [outcome] while others don’t?”

When to use it: Ask a question your target audience genuinely wonders about, then answer it with evidence or a clear explanation.

Example: Creator: “Why do some simple videos hold attention better than expensive productions?”

10. THE MYTH BUSTER

“You don’t need [common assumption] to achieve [goal].”

When to use it: Correct a widespread misconception, but add the nuance. Avoid replacing one oversimplification with another.

Example: Creator: “You don’t need a cinema camera to start making professional-looking Reels.”

11. THE STORY OPENER

“I nearly [setback] because I made this one decision…”

When to use it: Start in the middle of a real moment. Give enough context, show the tension and deliver the lesson.

Example: Founder: “I nearly missed a client deadline because I skipped one simple production step.”

12. THE COMPARISON

“Here’s the difference between [A] and [B]—and when each works.”

When to use it: Make the contrast concrete. Show examples side by side where possible.

Example: Video editing: “Here’s the difference between captions that decorate a video and captions that improve clarity.”

15 hook frameworks | 13–15

13. THE CHECKLIST

“Before you [action], check these [number] things.”

When to use it: Offer a fast, useful checklist that viewers can save and apply. Keep the list short enough to follow.

Example: Creator: “Before you record a Reel, check these four things.”

14. THE AUDIENCE CALL-OUT

“If you’re a [specific audience] trying to [goal], watch this.”

When to use it: Call out a clearly defined viewer and give them a relevant reason to stay. Avoid overly broad labels.

Example: Personal brand: “If you’re a coach trying to turn your expertise into content, start here.”

15. THE RESULT REVEAL

“Here’s what changed when I [specific action] for [time period].”

When to use it: Lead with a real experiment or documented experience. Share what worked, what did not and what you learned.

Example: Creator: “Here’s what changed when I planned my video hooks before filming for 30 days.”
